New York Herald: War has its heroes whom men delight to honor; but not alone in fort and field and on the vessel's deck, not mies, is the glorious courage of great souls displayed. For months a noble army of men and women have been a ging an unequal comes of the touch of the elbow, the pride of physicians, nurses, newspaper corrre spondents and other brave spirits in the south have struggled, each by himself, in a fight in which there has not come even a momentary full. Instead of the inspiriting hem has led a forlorn hope. Seldom has here been any one nigh to follow them, and when one has returned from the deadly breach, it has generally been to die of mortal wounds received. The heroic Lindley, who cries of combatants, they have heard only the moans of dying men, women and chil-dren. Not once have they joined with com-rades in victorious shouts. Every one of known and unknown, from north and south harrowing scenes like those depicted on
